What do you think of our "Safety First" cautions that we have placed in our cars? Complete sets of these cards have also been given to the schools, and Mr. Doron Green has taken a very lively interest in this work among the school children of Bristol, and the teachers of the several schools are co-operating with us in every way. Don't you think that all of this work is "worth while" even though it may prevent injury to only one person?

SENATOR SHEPPARD IN ELOQUENT TALK

Discourse on "Christian Citizenship" The Finest Ever Heard in Bristol.

At the men's meeting in the Bristol Baptist church, on Sunday afternoon of last week, United States Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, delivered the most eloquent and scholarly address ever listened to in Bristol. There were over 500 men present and the big audience was intensely interested.

Senator Sheppard's address as so capably reported by Miss Charlotte Belz, of Bristol, was as follows:

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

I am profoundly gratified to have this opportunity of being with you today, and I feel that perhaps I could select no topic more appropriate, especially in that today we celebrate the birthday of the founder and savior of our Nation, than the topic of "Christian Citizenship," a subject that is awakening more interest today throughout the country than ever before.

Perhaps the most universal, the most fundamental, the most significant condition of Christian existence may be described by the term "citizenship." It is at once the most ancient and the most modern mark of civilization. The moment mankind was divided into societies, sufficient organizations to make possible the establishment of definite and permanent relations between the society and the individuals concerned, then some of these relations constituted a permanent citizenship.

It is entirely conceivable that crude but distinct forms of citizenship united men long before they occupied definite territories or developed a permanent system of government. Whatever the connecting ties this human group, whether the necessity for defence or the impulse for plunder, whether the desire for development or the yearning for a warlike destiny, they comprised the first elements of citizenship, and the exercise of these powers and relations resulted in the creation of a determinate institution.

The progress of mankind has been reflected in the rise and fall of institutions. Governments, armies, navies, colleges, altars, temples, parliaments, social, commercial and religious organizations, states, colonies, provinces and empires, have expressed the cooperative impulse which inaugurated society. Now institutions must be distinguished from the power which creates them. The impulse, the acts, the relations which produce institutions are the basic factors, the earlier components of citizenship.

Citizenship is not therefore, in itself an institution, but is the source of institutions; it is the relation which lies at the very beginning of society and permeates its very foundation in every age. The people as a whole have always been the ultimate arbiters of history, the final source of power. The function of citizenship has remained their basic and universal weapon. Often people have failed or refuse to exercise this capacity; often it has remained unused so long as to be almost forgotten; often the people have acquiesced in despotism; often they have consented to their own humiliation, but there has never been in reality an hour in all history in which the people could not immediately have become the rulers of society. They had but to rise and strike; and the knowledge of the slumbering power has made tyrants tremble on thrones that seemed eternal. And wherever in town, in county, in state or in nation, conditions exist which ought not to be tolerated, the fundamental reason may be traced to the mental reason may be traced to the fact that people have failed through united and appropriate action to establish proper conditions, and in exact proportion as to this function of citizenship has been expressed for the promotion of human welfare, the world has grown in prosperity, in happiness and in liberty. The government everywhere is either what the people wish it to be or what the people permit it to be.

The creation and control of institutions involve the destinies of the race. In registering his will at the ballot box an individual shares in a sense the prerogatives of divinity. The creation of man on earth was the work of God. The enactment of laws and the establishment of institutions that shape and govern the lives of men and the fate of the nations of the earth are but a continuation of that work, and a man never performs a more sacred task than when he uses a ballot box to mould the destiny of his country.

Human happiness may be measured personally by the degree in which the peoples of earth have embodied in their institutions the true character and the proper conception of citizenship. As we have seen, citizenship in its principal function means the control of human affairs by the individual as a co-equal member of a self-governing society. Indeed citizenship is the function through which the masses wield the powers of government and mould institutions of economic and politic life. As we have seen, the people may at any moment through appropriate and constituted exercise of this function assume control of their own destiny.

The enumerable tragedies of history may be ascribed to the failure of individuals, through ignorance, through neglect, or through inherent fault, properly utilize this capacity for the welfare of himself and the state. No society of the crudest form has ever existed in which the idea of God was not operative in some fundamental way. There can be no society and no citizenship dissociated from the idea of God, and no inscription could be more appropriate for the cornice of this Republic than the beautiful and stately sentence "In God We Trust."

Without the idea of God, how powerless and frail is man, a pigmy on a tiny island in an infinitely shoreless sea, surrounded by an eternity of silence his life a momentary sigh, his destiny a torturing doubt. Whipped with tempests and scourged with fire, what is it that enables him to strive and hope? What is it that enables him to conduct with so much vigor the vast enterprise? What is it that leads him to form society, to enact laws, to fashion government, to build churches, palaces and schools? What is it that makes possible his high state of moral existence? The progress of the race, the preservation of order, the practice of morality, are due to the undying faith that God is the author and preserver of all life, to the general belief in the existence of God and the immortality of the soul.

In the light of these facts it is strange and sad that there are men today who attack the foundations of society, the basis of enlightened and devoted citizenship, by questioning God and immortality. The existence of God is written on every granite page of nature; it is inscribed on leaf and stream, on planet and on cloud; it is proclaimed by every mountain peak, trumpeted by every cataract; reflected in every sunset and mirrored in every star. It is demonstrated by the advance of man and the progress of creation, and God speaks to man in every flower, and rose perfume woos the enamoured air; He speaks to man in the murmuring streams and mighty forests; He speaks to man through rivers and seas, whose bosoms bear the commerce of the world; He speaks in the glory of every bright day and every matchless night; He speaks in the electric current that carries man around the world; He speaks in the accurate and complex machinery of the human body, in the intricate arrangement and the material dependence on the brain and heart in government, in brain and heart in art. His existence is written upon the skies, imprinted on the soul, and the fact of Him being neither parliaments nor peoples may with impunity disregard. The immortality of the soul is impressed upon the mind and heart of man; it is an inseparable collorary of the idea of God.

The hope of immortality springs from the deepest feeling of the soul, the feeling of connection with eternity. It is one of the most powerful and beneficent influences that operate on the happiness and aspirations of mankind. It is one of the principal pillars of citizenship, the chief impulses of citizenship and the foundation upon which it sustains and strengthens man in every battle and undertaking of life, and makes him more thankful of the calamities of the unthankful of the peoples at its earth as Gibraltar of the peoples at its base. Nowhere, my friends, may we find a more fitting illustration of the sense of universal nearness to God than in that hymn of hymns, that song of songs, "Nearer My God to Thee," in my judgment the most magnificent or one of the most magnificent in mental language.

So that I say to the idea of a God as symbolized in that beautiful hymn and doctrine of immortality, and to the belief and principle emanating from both, all governments have looked and must continue to look for the basis of loyal citizenship and the observation of obedience to law. The observation of obedience to law is as true today as it was Plutarch is as true today as it was when first uttered over 1900 years ago: "You may travel all the world over and you may find cities without walls, without kings, without men, without theatres and without gymnasiums, but nowhere will you find the city without God, without altars, without prayer, without sacrifice. Sooner may a city stand without foundations than a state without belief in God. This is the bond of all society, the pillar of all education."

Let us observe here that while the idea of a God and the practice of religion were necessary factors in the organization and progress of every nation and every people from the beginning of history, by no means does it follow that these early beliefs were a true conception of deity; in fact the early religions of the world were almost wholly materialistic and represented but dimly and imperfectly the spiritual and religious impulse which was the universal basis of society and citizenship.

When the world had been consolidated under the Roman Empire, the state religion was observed by every state and imposed on all mankind, Roman and conquered alike, as the head of Roman authority and power, was exalted to the station of a God and became an object of universal worship.

It is necessary in studying the true source of institutions, that it makes the individual citizen a personal ruler of society. We have seen that before the advent of Christ, the world completely failed to appreciate the importance of the individual life as the basis of true citizenship.

Christian citizenship is the ideal citizenship. Gal. 5:13, "For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." And my friends the countries that have made real progress in liberty and in prosperity have been the nations that have acknowledged Him and so it will be in community, in town, in state and in nation, throughout all the reaches of time. Not only has Christian citizenship brought happiness and liberty to individuals and nations, but the Christian influence for developing a worldwide citizenship and happiness, the advent of universal peace we owe to the Christian idea, to the Christian impulse, and the great advance toward international arbitration. Before the Christian era these ideas were not known. There were instances of arbitration among certain nations of Greece but they were confined to the Hellenic people.

Within the last hundred years over thirty international congresses have assembled to consider differences of international concern. It has remained for one of the lesser nations of the world, however, to give mankind the most beautiful example of all time. In 1900 the adjoining republics of Chili and Argentina were on the brink of war. In an endeavor to arrange a settlement and to stay the grim monster war, these countries in a memorable experiment agreed to the appointment of King Edward of England as arbitrator. Both republics accepted his decision without complaint and the effect of this peaceful solution of a question that would have ordinarily plunged the disputing nations into conflict, was that both nations began to disarm and supply the funds raised in anticipation of war to the construction of roads and bridges and other public improvements, and in commemoration of that event both countries joined in the erection of a colossal statue of Christ on the summit of a high point in the Andes, on the middle of the boundary line. The statue was made of bronze and melted cannon and stands there the King of Peace, with one hand supporting the cross and the other pointing heavenward.

On the inscription were these words, "Sooner shall these mountains crumble to dust than Chili and Argentina break the peace which at the feet of Christ the redeemer they have sworn to observe."

God hasten the break of the day when on the boundary of every nation of the globe shall stand the figure which lifts its warning finger to teach eternal love, unchanging brotherhood and everlasting peace.

After nine years of labor the last barrier was broken on January 10 in the Catskill aqueduct tube, the longest water tunnel in the world. It extends 111 miles, from the Ashokan reservoir, New York, to Brooklyn. Esopus, New York, to Brooklyn and when in operation two years hence will supply New York with 500,000,000 gallons of water daily. By many engineers the undertaking has been classed second only to the Panama Canal. It cost in dollars more than $160,000,000; in human lives nearly 200.

REVIEW OF EVENTS AT COUNTY SEAT

Interesting Correspondence from Our Doylestown Representative.

Doylestown March 4.

County seat news is a scare article this week outside of the fact that we have been all of us busy since Sunday shoveling snow. Sunday morning we had a storm, but as the snow melted almost as fast as it fell no one anticipated much trouble, but by noon it had grown much colder and the wind began to blow almost at gale and by eight o'clock almost became entirely a pedestrian to make headway against it. The non-arrival of the afternoon railroad trains was the first real notice we had of a blizzard and commuters kept their 'phones busy in an attempt to get news of the outside situation from the depot.

On Monday morning the wind was still high and the snow falling fast with the result that but few people were out on the street and those few had to wade through drifts often from seven to ten feet deep. There was to have been a session of court on Monday morning, but of all of the court house officials none were present but Judge Ryan, who waited through the drifts from his home to the court house, reaching there in ample time for the performance of his judicial duties, but as the parties and their attorneys did not put in an appearance everything went over until March sixteenth.

One of the peculiarities of the storm was that while it broke down the telegraph and telephone lines outside of town there was almost perfect service in the town and not an electric light was put out of commission. On those streets in the higher part of the town many people were afraid to retire on Sunday night because of fear of their houses blowing down or being crushed. In the centre of the town the drifts completely blocked travel and even on Tuesday after there had been a large force of men at work some of the principal streets were most impassible. They was no train service until Tuesday afternoon and then but one train got out and one came in that had been buried in a twenty foot drift at the Farm School two miles from the county seat.

Of course there are at present indications and there will be none this week, and in the case of the Bristol and Easton trolleys probably none for the greater part of next week and as next week is Criminal court week it will undoubtedly be a great hardship to witnesses and jurymen and will keep many more people here all night than is customary now.

Many funerals have had to be postponed and in some cases great difficulty will be had in holding them this week. Although we do not have as much snow as in the memorable blizzard of 1888, nevertheless, the damage may be greater and certainly the inconvenience is almost as great. Then a day a thaw started in and heavy freshets are looked for that may be as effectual in cutting the county seat off from outside communication as heavy snow drifts. Altogether the outlook for court next Monday is not a very good one.

Dame rumor says that negotiations that have been pending for some time past by which the electric light plant at the county seat will change hands have at last been finally consumated and that the change in ownership will take place on or about April first next. Among the many rumors as to the prospective purchaser is one that we all want to believe and that is that a holding company will take the title to the plant but the real purchaser will be the Lehigh Valley Transit Company, which will at once start out to build the proposed electric road from Perkasie to New Hope via Doylestown and which will also in the near future build an extension from Doylestown to Lansdale, and if this be true we can look with equanimity for the change of ownership. But if the Bucks County Public Service Company, which already owns our gas plant get it why then we will certainly have serious difficulties to contend with as they will then have a monopoly of all our lighting franchises and naturally prices will be out of sight, exceeding great height. The present electric plant is owned by county seat stockholders and is being run in the interest of the consumer as well as being well managed that a fair dividend is paid and a sinking fund for repairs, rebuilding, etc., maintained.

A petition in the interest of the candidacy of Judge Endlich, of Reading, as a candidate for the Supreme Court, was circulated here this week. The judge is quite well known here, as it was Doylestown from which he procured his title, then Miss Amy Dudley, a niece of the late General W. W. H. Davis, and one of the belles of the county seat at that time. Judge Endlich is one of the very best of a number of good candidates and will take a large vote here. Outside of that small incident politics is apparently dead, and but little is heard on the subject.

Asher K. Anders took possession of the Doylestown postoffice on Monday morning. The blizzard left but little work so that he had two good long days to familiarize himself with the details of the office work. Mr. Anders will undoubtedly make an extra good postmaster as he is perfectly competent, a hard worker and one of the most careful and painstaking of men. No complaints will get by without his personal attention and he will endeavor to better the service at every opportunity. The county seat is to be congratulated on its new official.

Harry Baxter, a twelve-year-old lad, stood in the centre of "Dutch Lane" last Friday and waited for a large bob sled coming down the hill. He jumped to escape the sled, but jumped too late and was struck by it, which resulted in a broken leg. Now our wise police force intend to stop sledding on that hill, where sleds and boys and girls have held away from time immemorial, because one boy by his own fault met with an accident. A number of parents will resist this ukase on the part of a too officious policeman because of the recognized safety of the hill for coasting and because while the world is progressing there are still a few who are of the opinion that innocent sport is a good thing for the rising generation.

FALLSINGTON ITEMS

John Tatum has returned from a visit to Atlantic City.

Roland Hazard, of Bristol, was the guest of his son, William, while attending the meeting of the Primitive Friends last week.

Frank Crossdale and wife, of near Trenton Junction, were visiting at Edward Crossdale's last week.

The engagement of Miss Lillian Wright, daughter of Mrs. Ida Wright, to William Lovett, son of Ellwood Lovett, near Falls, has been announced.

No trains ran from this place on Monday morning as the cut was so filled with snow the turntable and switches could not be operated.

Two popular young men of our village with their lady loves while out sleighing had the misfortune to be upset but beyond a bad scare they were not hurt.

A daughter arrived on Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gregory Mende, Jr.

A devotional meeting and conference for the parishes of Holmesburg, Bristol Newtown, Doylestown, Buddeton, Tacony, Wissinoming, Frankford Bridesburg, Aramingo, Oxford, Edington and Lower Dublin will be held by Bishop Philip Rhinelander in All Saints church, Torresdale, on Saturday, March 14th, 1914: at 10 a. m. Holy communion; address by the bishop; offering for missions; 12 noon, intercessions, 1 p. m., luncheon; 2:15 conference: Topics, Parish Apportionment, the Women's Auxiliary, United Offering and a talk by Dr. William H. Jeffries, on "What Missions Have Done for Us." The bishop expresses the wish to meet the women of every auxiliary at the time and these parishes which have no auxiliary are most cordially invited to come that they too may have a part in the conference. Trains from Broad Street Station come to Torresdale station from which the church is only a few minutes walk. The Frankford and Bristol trolleys pass the door.

NEWTOWN NOTES

Willis G. Worstall went to West Chester on Saturday to spend Sunday, but was storm stayed there for several days.

Miss Miriam Hillborn entertained the senior class of the Loyal Temperance Legion on Friday evening.

Stephen M. Vandegrift has sold out his grocery store business to H. G. Miller, who moved here from New York State last fall. Mr. Miller has also purchased the Janney house near the George School. His children are students in this institution.

Horace G. Reeder and Samuel R. Richardson are circulating petitions for signature to be presented to the court asking for a jury to condemn the Bridgetown and Newtown turnpike.

Mrs. Smith, wife of Dr. Charles B. Smith, is down at Atlantic City, stopping at Galen Hall. Mrs. H. C. Thornton and Miss Goodman are also there, after spending several months in Cleveland, Ohio; they will return to their Newtown home about April 1.

Next Monday evening the young people of Newtown Grange will give an entertainment in Newtown hall. A mock trial and good music will make up a good programme.

Harold L. Watson, now of Harrisburg, Virginia, was a visitor here last week.

Miss Marianna Packer was over from Montclair, N. J., visiting her mother over the past week-end.

Temperance sentiment is booming in Newtown. Many new members are joining the W. C. T. U. and the No-License campaign committee, which is headed by the most prominent and influential business men of the city.

The blizzard which descended upon this vicinity on Sunday, succeeded in completely tying up Newtown by night. The last train left Newtown at 9.10 p. m., but was caught in a huge drift of snow at Germana cut, a few miles out of town, and it was not extricated until after Monday afternoon. Trolleys made no attempt to run on Monday, as even in town drifts were six feet deep, and wires were down. Not only was traffic destroyed, but the heavy wind Sunday night put telephones out of commission by hundreds, and all street lamps and houses depending upon electricity were in total darkness by eight o'clock Sunday evening. Business, schools and the town in general has experienced a real "test," and many say not since '88 has the town been in so snow covered a condition.

The whole course of things goes to teach us faith. We need only obey. There is a guidance for each of us, and by lowly listening we shall hear the right word.

EDGELY ETCHINGS

Mr. and Mrs. William Murray, of Philadelphia, were visitors with Mr. and Mrs. John Kilgallon, of this place, for several days this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Gallagher, of Philadelphia, were the guests of relatives at this place the tonepart of the week.

Mrs. William J. Johnson and Thomas Dunbar carried off the prizes at the meeting of the Edgely Euchre Club last week. The meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adams at Edgely, and a delightful time was had by all.

Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Kensell, of Philadelphia were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Honour at Croxy Nook for several days this week.

Horace Eastburg, of this place, had the misfortune to get caught in one of the stalled trolley cars on Sunday night and was compelled to sleep in the car all night.

Doctor Haines was the only person to venture out on Monday morning and he succeeded in reaching all of his customers and served his entire route with milk.

Miss Annie Poe, of Bristol, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Strumfels for several days.

The laundry and the D. Landreth Seed Company were unable to operate their plants on Monday and Tuesday on account of a scarcity of help.

Nearly every one in this village is entertaining some company which was forced to stay over on account of the storm.

Remember the poor little birds and throw out a few crumbs for them as it is very severe on them.

A number of our residents who went down to the men's meeting at Bristol on Sunday afternoon were not able to get back until Wednesday.

There were no sessions of school at Riverview or the Delaware schools until Wednesday.

The high winds on sunday and Monday nights caused an increased fuse of workmen to be put on at the lodge in greenhouses and it was hard work to keep the flowers from freezing.

Carpenters are making a number of repairs and alterations to the Cowell property, which will be occupied by a young couple from Bristol next month.

There was a good attendance at the church services at Headley Manor on Sunday morning. Rev. George M. Bradhead, of Bristol, delivered a fine sermon.

Cornwells and Vicinity.

Cornwells received its just share of the blizzard. Passengers were unable to reach Philadelphia or New York on Monday but on Tuesday morning about 10 a. m. the train which left New York on sunday night at midnight arrived at Cornwells. The Sunday express was twenty hours from Philadelphia to New York. We forget what a trolley car, or even a track looks like.

The Business Men's Association failed to meet on Monday for the first time since its organization.

Russell Knight and fiancee spent the week-end at the home of A. C. Waldman, on Hulmeville road.

Miss Elva Snyder is ill at present. Eugene and Miss Cecelia Snyder have been obliged to board elsewhere for fear of quarantine.

Frank A. Ross spent the prolonged week-end with Herbert N. Shenton at the home of T. B. Simons.

C. Linford Kline was unable to reach home for several days on account of the storm.

Mrs. Mann and children are visiting in Hallycon, Bucks county.

Miss Dorothy C. Bhaer has been unable to teach school for the last few days.

Do not forget the supper on Saturday March 7. Do not let the blizzard keep you home, but come in the cold and keep the P. O. S. of A. hall warm and enjoy a good supper as well as a good ride.

"Breaking Home Ties."

That was the title of a picture in the art display at the St. Louis World's Fair some years ago. The crowds lingered long before it because it portrayed an experience in their own lives. What a heart-rending time for both the boy and the home folks!

That experience is being re-enacted daily in hundreds of homes scattered over the Keystone State. How lonesome the young man feels those first few days in the crowded city streets looking for work where no one knows him! How lonesome in his room during the first few days at college or from home and friends! If we can think back to a similar experience in your own life you know what mingled emotions are surging in the lonesome lad's breast. No wonder some of them spell shipwreck for the lad! Companionship at such a time is much Friendship is what he needs most just then.

The State committee of the Young Men's Christian Association through its County Work Department by means of the Corresponding Membership System is meeting this need. Over 1200 young men have been followed through this "Breaking Home Ties" experience and introduced to Christian influences in their new surroundings.

Charles B. Wood, Associate Member for Appointed Corresponding Member for Bristol, Pa., for the ensuing year. He is a solicitor and will spend some time and send him word should your boy or your neighbor's be planning to leave home. The State Young Men's Christian Association, (Calder Building, Harrisburg, Pa.,) covets the opportunity of serving him.

EXAMINATION FOR BUCKS COUNTY P. O.

April 18 set as Day for Fourth-Class Office Holders to go Before Civil Service Board.

The executive order of President Wilson, requiring competative examinations before the Civil Service Commission for the position of all fourth-class postoffices at which the annual compensation is $180 or more, and at which the present incumbent was not appointed under civil service regulations, will be put into effect in Pennsylvania in April.

For Bucks county the examinations will be held in Doylestown on April 18, when applicants for postoffices in the following towns and villages must submit to the examination:

Andalusia
Bedminster
Cedar Bridge.
Churchville.
Danboro.
Erwinna
Forestgrove.
Holicong.
Lylland.
Jamison.
Johnsville.
Kintersville.
Lumberville.
Mechanicsville.
Milford Square.
Neshaminy
New Britain.
Newportville.
Pleasant Valley.
Plumsteadville
Point Pleasant.
Richlaro.
Rushland.
Solebury.
Trevose.
Tullytown.
Upper Black Eddy.
Washington
Wycombe.

Applicants may be examined at any of the examination points mentioned in the circular issued from the Postoffice Department, with regard to the postoffice at which the appointment is desired. The nearest points, except Doylestown, to this territory, are Philadelphia, Norristown and Easton.

An applicant for examination for appointment at any post office must reside within the territory supplied by such post office. No change in the date of examination at any of the examination points can be made. Applicants will be allowed to be examined on only one of the dates mentioned. The application form may be secured from the postmaster at any of the offices for which the examinations are held, the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., or the postmaster at any place at which the examination is to be held, and should be properly executed, indicating therein the examination point at which the applicant desires to be examined, and should be immediately forwarded to the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. Persons who, for any reason, are unable to forward their applications to the Commission in time to receive written authority to enter the examination will be examined, subject to the subsequent approval of their application, if they appear for examination at a place and on a date scheduled in section 3 of the circular. For location of the examination room, apply at the post office at the place where the examination is held.

In a supplement issued by the Postmaster General on November 17, 1913, occurs the following paragraph giving directions to the First Assistant Postmaster General:

"In selecting persons from the eligible registers furnished by the Civil Service Commission for appointment as fourth-class postmasters, it is my desire that the person with the highest rating be chosen, unless good and valid reasons are submitted to the department showing that this would not be in the best interest of the service. If reasons are submitted sufficient to make the selection of the first eligible undesirable, then it is my desire that the person with the next highest rating be chosen, unless good and valid reasons are submitted to show the inadvisability of his appointment. In such case the third eligible may be selected. In no case should the second or third eligible be chosen unless the appointment of one of the higher standing eligibles has been shown to be inadvisable from the standpoint of the greatest efficiency in the postal service. In rendering conclusions as to the most desirable appointments an endeavor should be made to select persons whose business and temperamental equipment is likely to reflect credit on the postal service."

PROTECTION THAT DOES NOT PROTECT.

What rank heresy is this that the American Wool and Cotton Reporter is preaching. That great organ of the cotton and wool industry is at last getting around to the position and views the situation on common ground with the Gazette. For several years we have been attempting to explode the fallacy that the basic tariff on wool was any benefit to the wool grower and was only a trick of the scheming manufacturers which gave the latter a pretense for pyramiding "compensatory duties." The tariff on raw wool protected nobody.

The American Wool and Cotton reporter in last week's issue says:

Tariffs, popular belief to the contrary notwithstanding, have negligible influence on the success of the wool raising industry, as an unprejudiced review of conditions for several years past will reveal. The industry has declined even under the high rates of duty formerly prevailing, with a constantly increasing importation of the foreign staple, due in great measure to the lax methods of those who presumably should have the greatest interest in improving the status of the industry.

During the period when the Dingley tariff was in force, practically every type of wool sold at lower prices than are obtained today for a considerable period of time, and for four consecutive years prices averaged far below present quotations. Only once during that period did they reach present levels, and then but for a very short time, and the lowest point touched in a period of ten years past was during the time of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

How impotent is mere man and his works. This week we have witnessed the utter paralysis of business, commerce and transportation all caused by the fall of eight or ten inches ... of feathery flakes from the ... skies, so light that it was ... tipped and whirled into drifts by the winds. Huge engines of the rails, capable of pulling thousands of tons of freight; and of speeding across states at the rate of less than a mile a minute, were rendered as helpless as new born babes in their contests with the elements of nature.

Now we have found out the reason why men drink liquor. It is because of poor meals.

Poor cooking and lack of scientific discrimination in the preparation of meals are responsible for much of the excessive drinking of alcoholic stimulants in America, England and Ireland, according to Mrs. Sarah Hale Robbins of Manchester, N. H., and Paris, a well-known club member and temperance worker.

Mrs. Robbins believes with many others in the attraction of the saloon free lunch counter over the home table for the average man of the poorer classes, but she extends the connection between food and drink to include the well-to-do people who spend much for their meals and still do not provide what she calls proper food.

"I am convinced," says Mrs. Robbins, "that if plenty of good and appetizing food is provided attractively served and well cooked in the English-speaking homes there will be less desire to drink to excess in the average man. And this would mean more temperance, for to me temperance does not mean total abstinence, but moderation."

Light on the "Pork Barrel."

Hatboro Public Spirit.

The editor of the Public Spirit cannot understand how an appropriation by Congress to aid in building good roads is a bold, bad "raid on the United States Treasury," any more than is a Congressional appropriation to deepen creeks and rivers, or to build public buildings in various towns and cities throughout the land.

If it is proper for Congress to appropriate money for water commerce and trade, why not land commerce and trade?

The top-story editors of big city dailies make a great fuss because Congress talks of appropriating public money to aid road building. At the same time they beseech farmers to raise more produce and deliver it direct to city markets.

Farmers know their greatest and most expensive problem after the crop is raised is to get it to a good cash market. Nothing would so much help the farmers of this great country as a system of good roads that would radiate from the great cities throughout the farm sections, making it possible for the farmer who raises the produce to haul it at a minimum of expense to a direct buyer in the city.

Good roads will be a great factor in cutting down the high cost of living. Let Uncle Sam put his shoulders to the wheel.

Male Stenographers and Typewriters in Demand.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces that while it has no difficulty in securing sufficient female stenographers and typewriters to meet the needs of the departments at Washington, the supply of male eligibles has not been equal to the demand. Young men who are at least 18 years of age and who are willing to accept the usual entrance salaries, which are $840 and $900 a year, have excellent opportunities for appointment. While the entrance salaries are low advancement is reasonably rapid to those meriting it. The examinations which any competent stenographer should be able to pass, are held each month in the year, except December, at the principal cities of the United States.

Full information in regard to the examination may be secured by addressing the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., or the District Secretary, Post Office, Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Atlanta, Ga.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Paul, Minn.; Seattle, Wash.; San Francisco, Cal.; Customhouse, New York, N. Y.; New Orleans, La.; or Old Customhouse, St. Louis, Mo.

Entertained With a Washington Party.

On Saturday evening Miss Lulu Hannaberry, of Buckley street, Bristol, entertained a number of friends at a Washington party, Miss Hannaberry and Mr. Thorn impersonating George and Martha Washington. The dining room had been prettily decorated with the national colors, with red, white and blue streamers festooned from the chandelier to the four corners of the table, which was lighted by four candelabras. A menu of five courses was served. Games, vocal and instrumental music were enjoyed. Those present were: Misses Vera Holland, Mary Smith, Louise Hannaberry, Alfred Hannaberry, Messrs. Andrew Magill, of Stroudsburg, Pa.; Clifford Leland, of Newtown, and Lester Thorn and Philip Mahan, of Bristol.

The greatest peculiarity of the church fair is that there is nothing fair about it.

Facts vs. Grundy.

Philadelphia Record.

Joseph R. Grundy, manufacturer, of Bristol, and Republican boss of Bucks county, is in a sad state of mind over the workings of the Underwood tariff. In his own striking language the "Democratic party's attempt to undermine American industry must stop, or there will be a business cataclysm in this country dreadful to contemplate." We like that word cataclysm, which Webster defines as meaning an "extraordinary and violent change, such as a sudden and complete revolution." We commend it to Senator Penrose for use in his tariff speeches.

Mr. Grundy's remarks were made in his capacity as a manufacturer and relate exclusively to the wool and woolen trades, which he pictures as being in a deplorable condition because of the increasing importation of English goods and wool. Inasmuch as he is a practical and successful manufacturer his views are entitled to respectful consideration, but let us turn from them a moment to another standpat authority, the Boston Evening Transcript, whose trade reports, especially on the various branches of the textile industry, are generally regarded as accurate and impartial. Boston, it need hardly be said, is the centre of the woolen trade of the United States. In last Thursday's issue of the Transcript we find this summary (in part) of the wool market:

While leading wool men deprecate assertions of anything approaching a "boom" in the local market, the trade is undeniably more excited now than for years. Large blocks of foreign wool have been sold. Some leading houses have disposed of all the new wools that have arrived at good prices. Contracting is still progressing in the west, two large clips having been secured in Montana. In other sections growers have advanced prices to such an extent as to discourage operations. Territory wools are scarcer in this market, with prices very firm for the remainder unsold. With manufacturers advancing goods prices, the whole situation is distinctly stronger.

At the bottom of this unexpected activity is the undoubted shortage in desirable domestic wools. Not for a long time has so little been available. Though scattering lots of old wools come to light from time to time, the aggregate is very small compared with needs of the mills. Recent events seem to confirm predictions that not only would all the available wools ... be wanted before the season was over, but that higher prices were certain as soon as the real strength of the situation was understood. American manufacturers have retained control of the domestic market for the time being to an extent not contemplated by the framers of the tariff bill. The extremely low prices they have named on both lightweight and heavyweight goods have made competition from abroad impossible, under conditions now ruling in foreign markets.

Attention is especially directed to the statement regarding the control of the market by American manufacturers. It is impossible to go into a detailed description of the woolen trade, in which Mr. Grundy is particularly interested, but here is an extract from the Transcript's New York summary of the dress goods industry that seems pertinent:

So much is being said about importers being ready to relieve any shortage that buyers now in the city are making a careful store-to-store canvass for spots. They report that very few importers have stock goods and that they cannot promise delivery on cloths ordered for shipment into this country within 60 to 90 days. The large dress goods mills in Philadelphia and in cities in Pennsylvania and Ohio are getting more than their normal quota of business on 1914 initial orders. . . . Selling agents, who are able to have goods rushed through the finishing works, are getting a premium from the local trade. Cloak and jacket makers are taking care of their spring business and report that on nearly all ranges they are receiving repeat orders from retailers in the east.

We see nothing in these statements to indicate an industrial cataclysm. The wool trade is booming, and mills in this State, including, we hope, Bristol, "are getting more than their normal quota of business." What does Mr. Grundy want, anyway—the earth?

LANGHORNE LOCALS

PINCHOT WILL BE IN SENATE RACE

Writes to State Chairman Detrich that He Will be Candidate at Primaries.

In response to a communication from the State Chairman of the Washington Party, advising Mr. Pinchot that it was the unanimous desire of the party that he should become a candidate for the Washington Party nomination for United States Senator, Mr. Pinchot has written the following letter to the State Chairman announcing his candidacy:

Milford, Pa., February 28, 1914.

Mr. A. Nevin Detrich,
State Chairman, Washington Party,
Chambersburg, Pa.

My dear Mr. Detrich:

In your letter of February 7 you notified me that a conference of representatives of the Washington Party, held in Harrisburg on February 5, unanimously asked me to become a candidate for the Washington Party nomination for United States Senator at the primaries on May 19. Your letter adds that County Chairmen and State Committeemen covering the entire State, in response to an inquiry from you, mentioned no other name than mine as the choice of the party for the senatorial nomination. These expressions, your letter continues, indicate "the unanimous desire of the party in the State that you lead them to victory in 1914."

This is a clear call to action, which I have no right and no desire to refuse. Accordingly, I shall be a candidate at the primaries, and if nominated, at the election next fall.

I shall do so because in that way I hope and expect to have a hand in the first great task now before the citizens of Pennsylvania, namely, to drive out of power and destroy the bi-partisan political machine which has so long dominated and exploited the State in the interest of the privileged few and private monopoly. When that is done, and not before, we can enter upon a still greater task, which is to make Pennsylvania, through government by the people, social and industrial justice, and the use of our resources for the benefit of our people, a better place for all of us to live in.

The Washington Party, being free from all alliance or ... with the bi-partisan machine on either side, is the only party which can approach the task of destroying that evil with any hope of success. Its platform is the only platform which holds out any real prospect of lasting improvement. United, confident, dedicated to the common good, the Washington Party alone can do this work.

I shall run in the primaries, and if nominated, at the election, as a straight Washington Party candidate without fusion, combination deal, or understanding with either of the old parties. But if I am nominated, I shall welcome the co-operation of every man and woman who stands for the public welfare as against political corruption and private greed. The task of cleaning up the State is of immediate and vital interest to every good citizen regardless of party.

If nominated and elected, I shall continue to give my best efforts to prevent the further monopolization of natural resources, whereby the necessaries of life are controlled for the profit of the few, and the cost of living is raised for all the rest. I shall do my best also to break down monopolies already in existence, both in Pennsylvania and in the nation, and to oppose special interest in all its forms. Private monopoly is the backbone of all our troubles, and in special privilege lies its strength. Both must be destroyed.

I believe that this State and this continent, with their institutions and all that they contain, belong to all the people, present and future, and that the public good comes before private profit. I believe that the people have the right and the duty to control and use the government, the laws, and the natural resources for their own benefit, and that the object of government is not great riches for the magnates, but human welfare and justice between man and man.

In the practical application of such principles as these lies the hope of better things. How, in my judgment, they should be applied I shall set forth in detail hereafter.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) GIFFORD PINCHOT.

A Liberal Education.

That man, I think, has had a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that as a mechanism it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logic engine with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order; ready, like a steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind, whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art; to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself.

Such a man and no other, I conceive, has had a liberal education.—Thomas Henry Huxley in "Lay Sermons."

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN

Who Are "Just Ready to Drop."

When you are "just ready to drop," when you feel so weak that you can hardly drag yourself about—and because you have not slept well, you get up as tired-out next morning as when you went to bed, you need help.

Miss Lea Dumas writes from Malone, N. Y., saying: "I was in a badly run-down condition for several weeks but two bottles of Vinol put me on my feet again and made me strong and well. Vinol has done me more good than all the other medicines I ever took."

If the careworn, run-down women, the pale, sickly children and feeble old folks around here would follow Miss Dumas' example, they, too, would soon be able to say that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, had built them up and made them strong.

It is a wonderful, strength creator and body-builder, and we sell it under a guarantee of satisfaction. You get your money back if Vinol does not help you.

LIKED BIG BANKNOTES.

An English Lord Who Had a Curious Mania For Hoarding.

A curious story of hoarding is told in Ralph Neville's book of gossip:

A former Lord Dysart who lived more or less an invalid's life in a house on the outskirts of London, carefully watched over by a lady who acted as a sort of companion-nurse, one day asked her to go to town and get a check cashed for him at the Bank of England. When she was ready to start the old peer sat down at his writing table and, having written out a check for £100,000, told her to be sure and see that she got one note for the whole amount. * * * When she reached the bank the cashier communicated with the manager, who asked the nurse to step into his private office. Having satisfied himself as to her authority for making such a request, he said that if she did not object he would much rather send a clerk to accompany her with the note. She gladly assented to this arrangement, and in due course the clerk in person handed the £100,000 banknote to Lord Dysart.

After having done so he told the peer that there were only three such notes in existence. "One," he said, "we have at the bank, another I have just handed to your lordship and the third, which some time ago disappeared from circulation, we have never been able to trace."

"Perhaps I can help you," said Lord Dysart, and, hobbling over to a bureau, he unlocked a drawer and took out the missing £100,000 banknote, which had been lying there for many years.

Sitting Cross Legged.

Fully 80 per cent of the men and women who travel in the trains and street cars sit cross legged, and this habit is responsible for many ills, according to a prominent London physician. The prime objection against this habit, he says, is that the return flow of blood from the leg is stopped at the knee, the result being that the veins in the leg swell up. All the weight is thrown on one side of the body, and the under leg goes to sleep owing to the pressure put on the sciatic nerve. The body should be equally balanced. Then there is another danger. Too much crossing of the legs is sure to bring lopsidedness. Let the legs rest limply. In that way the muscles become eased, while the flow into and the return of blood from the legs is naturally done and the body is equally balanced.

Crooked Genius.

Once upon a time the city of London had to pay a county rate, but this was legally abolished many years ago. A certain attorney, who had at one time been connected with local taxation, hit upon the brilliant idea of relevying this obsolete rate and turning the proceeds to his own use. He got the proper demand notes printed, distributed them in the usual fashion and the recipients paid up like lambs. The swindler had a regular office, a collector and all the usual accompaniments. It is said that he made over $15,000 a year, and no one ever thought of questioning the legality of the rate. If the crooked genius had been satisfied with a couple of years' profit and then quietly discontinued the collection of the rate the chances are that no one would ever have been any the wiser. But he was greedy and kept on year after year, until by chance a demand note fell into the hands of some one who knew.—Pearson's Weekly.

Thirst For Knowledge.

In a cinematograph theater a little boy was with his grandmother when a film started with the title "Lost In the Desert."

"Grandma," asked the child, "what is a desert?"

"Hush!" murmured the grandmother. "It is a place where nothing grows."

"Oh!" said the little boy, pointing to an old man with a bald head. "Is that man's head a desert?"

OLD TIME PORTRAITS.

Does There Exist a Reliable Painting of the Poet Burns?

Was this the face that launch'd a thousand ships
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?

asks Marlowe, writing of the vision of golden Helen. A similar question has been asked in regard to the diverging portraits of Mary Stuart. Was this the face that turned so many heads some 350 years ago? The queen of Scots was assuredly bewitching. Knox admits it; Knollys asserts it. Ruthven lost his heart to her in Lochleven castle; whoever saw her desired her. Yet not one of Mary's portraits represents her as beautiful. Romney has sufficiently explained the fascination of Lady Hamilton for Nelson. But Mary Stuart's charm remains unexplained by her portraits.

And what about Burns? The point I wish to make is that old portrait painters are not to be depended on for strict fidelity to their originals. The mere fact that they differ so much in their representations of the same subject is enough to prove it. In regard to Burns, the question bears a twofold aspect. Not only do the portraits of the poet disagree with one another, but even that which by its frequent reproduction has tacitly been accepted as the truest representation cannot have been exactly like him when it was done. I refer, of course, to the familiar Nasmyth head and bust painted in 1787, when Burns was carrying all before him on his first visit to Edinburgh.—J. Cuthbert Hadden in Scribner's.

Love Song of a Bird.

"Just before an April dawn," says W. P. Pycraft in "The Courtship of Animals," "the cock capercailzie proclaims its love fever from a tree in a strange, unmusical serenade.

"With outstretched neck drooping wings and spreading tail he gives forth a weird, uncouth kind of song, more or less divisible into three parts. He begins with a series of notes which remind one of nothing so much as the sound made by two sticks knocked together at intervals of ten to fifteen seconds. Getting quicker and quicker and changing in key till at last they become bell-like. Then follows a series of sounds like the drawing of a cork out of a bottle, and these end with birdlike twitterings. By this time, however, the singer has worked himself up to an ecstasy of fervor so intense as to deaden him to all that may be passing in the outer world."

Willing to Take a Tip.

"Look here," said the sophomore's father, "how do you expect to do any studying if you're going to be out tearing around every night until 11 to 12 o'clock?"

"Darned if I know, dad. I wish you'd put your mind to work on the matter and let me hear from you if you succeed in working anything out."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Uniforms They Wore.

"The staff of the frontier regiment on guard along the Afghan side of the border had accepted an invitation to the mess at the Russian post. They arrived in due course, appearing in all the full dress grandeur of second hand railway uniforms. The officer commanding the detachment exhibited on the collar of his tunic the mystic words 'Ticket Collector.' His subordinate, a subaltern, was content with the less exalted label of 'Guard.' Out of courtesy to their guests the Russians suppressed their merriment, receiving nevertheless the impression that a portion of the subsidy granted by the government of India to the ameer of Afghanistan was taken out in the castoff uniforms of British public companies. The fact was that the ameer, through his agent in India had acquired a large parcel of discarded clothing at one of the annual sales of condemned stores in northern India."

BLIZZARD HITS BRISTOL

Worst Snow Storm in Years Paralyzes Railroad and Trolley Traffic.

Gripped by the severest blizzard since 1888 Bristol is putting forth every effort to overcome the effects of the storm which in reality was the outcome of two storms that met off the coast of North Carolina. The first developed Saturday night off the coast of Florida, while the second had formed in the lake region and was rapidly moving southward. One moving north, the other south, when they met and combined their forces they moved up the Atlantic coast. As the combined storm moved northward, it ventured inland as far as Harrisburg. From reports the storm was heaviest along the Delaware Valley.

A number of Bristolians who were in Philadelphia and unable to reach home on account of the crippled train service, report the storm more severe in Bristol than in Philadelphia.

Beginning as it did on Sunday morning with a light rain it soon changed to snow and by nightfall had completely blocked the railroad and trolley service.

On Monday morning a train left Broad Street at 1.30 o'clock and arrived at Bristol about 3.35. Quite a number of residents of the borough, who had been waiting in Broad Street Station for hours, ventured on the train in their anxiety to reach home but when they reached Bristol were compelled to remain in the station until nearly noon.

The lack of company offered sixty cents an hour and at that price were unable to secure anywhere near the number of men needed to clear the tracks of the snow.

The trolley service was completely paralyzed at 5 o'clock on Sunday evening.

The high winds did considerable damage. A large limb broke from a tree in front of the home of John McGinley on Locust street, and crashed into the second story front room. Another one in front of the office and cigar store of H. Nelson on Bath street, broke off and fell on the roof of the home of Joseph Cooper damaging the roof and third story.

A large electric light pole on Lincoln avenue near Pond street broke off, carrying the wires down.

On Monday morning President Leech of the school board, telephoned the teachers who were in town that no school would be held. On Tuesday one session was held with small attendance.

On Monday the mills were shorthanded but to those employes who did report lunch was served in the mill by the mill owners.

The steamer Springfield tied up to her wharf here on Saturday and was not able to get away until Wednesday. On Tuesday Captain Trout made an attempt to get across to Burlington, but after six hours' fight and only getting about three hundred yards away, backed to the wharf and tied up again.

Food stuffs were getting low and some of the nervous ones feared a famine but the stores were able to supply all demands.

EFFECTS OF THE STORM AT EDGELY.

The worst blizzard experienced in this section since 1888 struck here on Sunday morning and continued until Tuesday. A slight snow storm started early on Sunday and increased in fury as the day grew on and with the exceedingly high winds soon had the trolley service out of commission and drifted the snow in places to the depth of ten and twelve feet and tore down hundreds of telephone wires. There were five trolley cars stalled between this place and Bristol from Sunday until Wednesday. The service was not resumed until Thursday. The telephone wires were all down and this caused a grounding of the trolley wires and no power could be turned on. Passengers on the cars on Sunday evening were forced to remain on them all night as the storm was at its height and it was almost impossible to walk or see.

At this place nearly every one had two or more visitors who were unable to get away as the roads were almost impassable. The majority of people hereabouts were pretty well supplied with provisions, but with the extra demand the supply had to be very carefully handled. The Headley Manor grocery store proved a blessing to a large number of our people but it was not long before it was impossible to get a loaf of bread, an yeast cake to make any, or any cakes or crackers, and nearly every household had to resort to biscuits. The oil supply was also very short and candles provided the means of lighting.

A number of trains were stalled just above this place from Sunday night until Monday evening and the passengers were willing to pay any price for rolls and coffee but there were none to be had.

Elmer Harbison, assistant manager of the trolley road, accompanied by two employes, worked their way from Bristol to this place on Monday and it took them four hours to make the trip. When "Cozy Nook" was reached the men were nearly perished and it took a half hour to thaw out their coats before they could be unfastened.

The foundry at North Bristol was unable to secure enough employes on Monday and Tuesday to operate the plant, there being but about twenty-five hands reporting.

The D. Landreth Seed Company's office force was unable to get out on Monday and Tuesday and the firm declared a holiday.

None of the residents of Edgely or Headley Manor were able to get into Bristol to work until late on Tuesday and the walking was very bad even then, as there had been no traffic on the roads.

The prospects are that the telephone service will be out of commission for some time as nearly all wires are down.

There was but little damage reported to property at this place. A number of small trees were blown down and fences broken by telephone poles falling on them, but nothing to any great extent. The plant of the Bristol Patent Leather Works at North Bristol, was operated on Monday and Tuesday, with a reduced force of employes.

An Unpleasant Experience.

Clifton Watt, of Wood street, had an unpleasant experience in the storm, about one o'clock on Monday morning. Mr. Watt is employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and cares for the engines that lie over night at North Bristol. About one o'clock he left the section supervisor's house to look at the engines which stood about fifty to seventy-five yards away. Before reaching the engines he got into a snow bank about ten feet high. The storm was at its height, the wind blew out his lantern and in the intense darkness and storm he was unable to find his way out of the drift. As he did not return to the supervisor's house, several Italian section men who were staying there, started out to look for him, and found him fast in the snow, almost frozen. They dug him out and took him back to the house, where he was thawed out.

Mill Owners Serve Meals.

At the mills of Thomas L. Leedom & Co., and William H. Grundy & Co., on Monday the firms furnished lunch at the noon hour to those of the employes who braved the storm to be at work.

Hundreds of sandwiches and rolls were served as well as coffee, sardines, salmon, etc. At Grundy's mill six crates of eggs were boiled, 500 sandwiches were furnished, 1000 rolls, 35 pounds of cheese. Sleighs were pressed into service to take the girl employes home after the day's work.

How dear, how soothing to man, arises the idea of God, peopling the lonely place, effacing the scars of our mistakes and disappointments.—Emerson.

Death of Mrs. A. F. Gilbert.

Mrs. Anna F. Gilbert, 56 years old, mother of Mrs. Harry C. Wright, of 311 Radcliffe street, Bristol, and widow of the late Charles Gilbert, died in St. Francis hospital, Trenton, last Saturday night at 9.45 o'clock after a short illness of pneumonia. Mrs. Gilbert was taken to the hospital from Bristol two or three days before her death.

Besides her daughter, Mrs. Wright, the deceased leaves one son, William O. Gilbert, of New York, who was formerly a member of the New York National League baseball team, and two brothers who reside in Plainfield, N. J., and a brother in Trenton. She also leaves a sister whose home is in Trenton. Mrs. Gilbert had made her home with her daughter in Bristol for the past five years. She was an active worker in the Methodist church. The body was brought to Bristol and the funeral services were held on Wednesday. The interment was made in a family burying ground in Trenton.

Bible Lecture Course.

A free public Bible lecture course is being arranged for this place, the purpose being to arouse interest an unsectarian Bible study and to explain many important and difficult questions not generally understood. The International Bible Students' Association has arranged to provide talented speakers for the entire series. "Beyond the Grave," is the subject of the opening lecture which will be delivered Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, in Mechanic's hall, over the postoffice, by Pastor C. J. Woodworth, of New York City.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend the entire lecture course. Tickets will be unnecessary, since the work is strictly philanthropic. It is stated on authority that the collection basket will be conspicuous by its absence. It is especially urged that none miss the opening lecture of the series.

Travel Club Meeting.

On Friday last the Travel Club held its semi-monthly meeting at the home of Miss Mary Gilkeson, on Radcliffe street, when the following programme was enjoyed:

Paper—Mountains and Fjords of Norway, by Miss Laing.
Reading—Royal Family of Norway, Miss Alice N. Tredell.
Music—Victrola selections, Miss Mary Gilkeson.
Paper—Norwegian Manners and Customs, Mrs. Stuckert.

H. B. Eastburn Vice President of Normal School Board.

Hugh B. Eastburn, Esq., of Doylestown, who has been appointed a trustee in the West Chester State Normal School by the State Board of Education, has been elected vice president of that board. As is generally known, the West Chester State Normal School is the first normal school in the state to pass into the ownership and management of the commonwealth.

At the meeting of the board of trustees of the school, held on February 25th, the board decided to offer one boy in the public schools of each of the four counties of the normal school district, viz: Bucks, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery, for the best acre of corn raised during the coming season, a free trip to Washington; and to the girl in the public schools of Bucks county who does the best cooking a similar trip. These students will be taken to Washington with the senior class of the normal school, probably next February. These school trips to Washington have been taken by the senior class of the West Chester State Normal School for many years, and are great opportunities. All the necessary expenses of the winners from their homes to Washington and return, including hotel bills, railroad expenses, etc., will be included in the prize. Full details as to the plans and methods of judging among the competitors will be published soon. This preliminary announcement is intended to suggest to the boys and girls of the public schools of Bucks county to make their plans to take part in this contest.

Board of Health Report.

At the monthly meeting of the Bristol Board of Health held last evening there were fourteen deaths reported for February, viz: Bronchopneumonia 2, arterio sclerosis 2, and one each from pneumonia, edema of the lungs, acute cardiac dilatation, cardiac paralysis, erysipelas, patulous foramen ovale, scarlet fever, pulmonary apoplexy, diabetic coma and premature birth.

Physicians reported fifty-one cases of contagious and communicable diseases as follows: Pulmonary tuberculosis, 1; pneumonia, 8; whooping cough, 4; erysipelas, 3; varicella, 1; typhoid fever, 2; chicken pox, 3; rubella, 2; scarlet fever, 9; diphtheria, 7, and German measles, 11.

Birthday Reception.

Mrs. J. A. Browne tendered a birthday reception on Wednesday evening, March 4, to Rev. J. A. Browne. A very pleasant evening was spent. Among those present were: Mr and Mrs. H. Northgates, Mrs. L. Roe, Mrs. E. Miller, Charles Fisher, E. Farrell, Mrs. N. Bosley, M. Bosley, Miss M. Evans, T. R. Alexander, Miss B. Roberts, Mrs. Morgan, Miss L. Munce, George Munce, Mrs. C. Pierce, Mrs. K. Munce, Mrs. M. Harris, Mrs. A. Durnin, Mrs. M. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mercer. After refreshments were served all left wishing Rev. Browne many more happy birthdays.

Philadelphia's Chief Boomer Will Speak in Bristol.

Edward James Cattell, city statistician of Philadelphia, and the prince of boomer, has been secured by William C. Peirce to address the citizens of Bristol, at a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce to be held on Thursday evening, March 26th. Mr. Cattell is a captivating speaker and should arouse the enthusiasm of Bristol people to a point that will inspire them to do their best to put Bristol in the foreground of Pennsylvania's progressive cities.

Health Lecture by Dr. Miller.

Dr. W. C. Miller, of the State Board of Health Department, gave a highly interesting lecture on tuberculosis at the Bristol high school on Tuesday evening and despite the almost impassable walks there were about fifty persons in attendance. Dr. Miller also delivered a lecture in the high school on Thursday morning to which the scholars from the various schools were present. Dr. Miller will deliver another illustrated address to which the public are invited in the high school hall on Tuesday evening next.

German Measles Epidemic.

A mild epidemic of German measles has broken out in Bristol. Those who were ill with this disease are: James, the 10-year-old son of Serrill Douglass, of Dorrance street; Helen Fitzgerald, 7-years-old, 449 Jefferson avenue; James, 17-year-old son of Mrs. Mary McCarry, 635 Pine street; James, 16-year-old son of James Dawson, 443 Jefferson avenue; May, 19-year-old daughter of Mrs. Eberhardt, 321 Walnut street.

TWO MEN AND GIRL SERIOUSLY CHARGED

Helen Johns Held for Enticing Young Girl for Immoral Purposes.

On Friday morning last, in 'Squire Kraft's court, Bristol, Helen Johns, a 21-year-old negro girl, residing on Penn street was held in $2500 bail for court on the charge of pandering.

Mike Iocovone commonly known as "Dippy," was held under $500 bail on the charge of fornication. Richard Pucino, was held without bail for court on the charge of statutory rape on Ella Seul' a 15-year-old white girl.

Complaint had been made of the Johns girl to Chief of Police Saxton. He at once detailed Officer Sackville on the case and together they procured evidence sufficient to convict the accused persons who were arrested at the Colonial Theatre on Thursday evening.

From the evidence given at the hearing the Johns girl has been notorious in her relations with white men, principally the Italian young men of the neighborhood in which she lived and as opportunity offered, enticing young girls away with her. It was shown by witnesses that on the Saturday previous, the four persons went into the Colonial Theatre building after the last performance, and remained there during the night.

On Sunday the two girls remained in the building during the day the two young men going out for eatables, then returning to the building, where all four remained until late that evening.

During the time they were in the building the four occupied the dressing rooms of the theatre.

"Dippy" secured bail, shortly after the hearing, but Helen Johns and Richard Pucino, were taken the same day to Doylestown, where they were committed for court. Officer Voss took the pair to the county jail.

SCHOOL BOARD HAS BRIEF SESSION

The regular monthly meeting of the Bristol School Board was held on Wednesday evening and but little business was transacted. The directors present were Messrs. Leech, Green, Taylor, LeCompte and Young.

Deron Green was authorized to prepare a set of resolutions expressing the regrets of the school board over the death of the treasurer Edward H. Foster.

The Finance committee was authorized to audit the account of the late treasurer.

The School committee reported very successful celebrations in reference to Washington's and Lincoln's birthdays in the Riverside theatre.

The Property committee consented to allow the use of the second floor of the old Wood street building for the playing of basket ball by the high school boys.

Charles E. Scott was elected treasurer to serve the unexpired term of Edward H. Foster, deceased.

The salaries of the superintendent, teachers and janitors for the month ending March 4 were ordered paid.

Bills amounting to $60.15 were ordered paid as follows:

E. Mack tuning piano,	$ 2.50

L. B. Rue, carpenter work,	3.40

Henry B. Bartow Dead.

Henry B. Bartow, formerly of Bristol, died suddenly of an acute attack of indigestion at his home, 419 south Carlisle street, Philadelphia, on Monday. Mr. Bartow was about 55 years old, and for ten years had been cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank, of Philadelphia. Prior to that he was trust officer of the Trust Company of North America. He was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania in 1878, and studied law.

Mr. Bartow was born in Bristol and was the son of the late Rev. Henry B. Bartow, formerly rector of St. James' church, Bristol.

The deceased is survived by a widow, a brother and sister. The deceased's mother was a sister of the late Mrs. Symington Phillips, of Bristol.

LOCAL NEWS.

The exhibition at the Jefferson avenue school building given by the State Department of Health will be continued all next week from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m., until Saturday, to which all those who are interested are cordially invited.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Sidney Cadwallader, Miss Elsie Cadwallader, of Yardley, and John Wood, of Torresdale, who were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Leedom, were unable to return to their homes until Tuesday on account of the blizzard.

A highly interesting lecture will be given in the Baptist church next Monday evening by Dr. C. A. Lamar, of Georgia. His subject will be "Dixie Before the War." No regular admission will be charged, but there will be a silver offering collected at the door.

James Turner and William Stetson were to attend court on Monday last as witnesses in Chief Saxton's case against George Grener, of Philadelphia, who was arrested on February 11th on the charge of vagrancy. The storm prevented any attendance and the case was postponed.

Tom Rodgers of Radcliffe street, went into the police station on Friday last, to carry luncheon to Richard Pucino, a prisoner, awaiting transfer to Doylestown, and by mistake was locked in the cell. After considerable noise on his part, he attracted the attention of one of the officers and was released from his unpleasant confinement.

Chief of Police Saxton has had two guests for the past week, owing to the blizzard preventing his taking them to Doylestown. On Saturday night the officers arrested John Crothers, of Philadelphia, for disorderly conduct, and at a hearing before 'Squire Kraft, he was fined ten dollars and costs in default of which he was committed to the county jail for thirty days. Joseph Luppino was arrested for larceny on complaint of Vito Barbara and was held under $800 bail for court.

Faust; instrumental music: Miss Tilton, Messrs. C. Afflerbach, Sr., and William Blessing. The entertainment was greatly appreciated, the encores numerous.

The storm of Sunday night and Monday simulated very closely an old fashioned blizzard, the streets and roads were badly drifted, travel by steam and trolley cars at a standstill, no mail was sent out or received at the local office, the electric lights did not burn the latter part of Sunday night and none on Monday night. The telephone wires and poles were down in a great many places, no communication either by telephone or telegraph could be had with the outside world. A trolley car of the Bucks County Electric Railway Company got as far as the gravel pit switch, on Ford avenue, on Sunday afternoon going to Bristol, several passengers had to remain in the trolley car during the night. On Monday morning Jesse Webster took two of the passengers to his house and cared for them. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hibbs were storm stayed at Jesse Webster's. Several persons that had been to Philadelphia on Sunday, on returning in the afternoon were compelled to stay at the railroad station at Langhorne or go to the hotel, as the trolley services were interrupted. The persons that attended the men's meeting in Bristol on Sunday afternoon were compelled to remain there. Edwin Henry, Sr., and Ewald Henry, of Eddington, started home on Monday morning, only got as far as Newportville, where they had to hire someone to bring the team back here which had been loaned and had to go on foot the rest of the way.

New P. O. S. of A. Camp at Langhorne.

Washington Camp, No. 144, Patriotic Order Sons of America, was regularly instituted Thursday night, at Langhorne, by State President, Samuel C. Wells; assisted by D. President, J. D. James, of Doylestown, and Special Organizer, Robert M. Welsh. The degree team of Camp No. 79, Bristol, conferred the degree work.

A large delegation from Camp 789 accompanied the local degree team from Bristol in a special car and many other neighboring camps were represented, and No. 2 from the State of Maryland. P. D. P., R. B. Carty, of Bristol, acted as secretary. Thirty-eight Americans assumed the obligations of the order.

D. P., J. D. James, of Doylestown; State President, Samuel C. Wells and P. P., W. A. Bradley were called upon and made short addresses.

Owing to the District President, John D. James, having to leave early, the installation was performed by P. D. P., R. B. Carty, assisted by P. P., George F. Cramer.

A vote of thanks was extended the degree team of Camp No. 789, Bristol, for the splendid manner in which the team expounded the work. The new camp starts off with a promise of a splendid future.

Coasted Into the River.

The danger of coasting down the steep hills along the river shore was fully demonstrated on Friday last, when the young son of Howard Appleton, of Bristol, failed to stop his sled and plunged over the bank, at Mulberry street. Fortunately the old sled struck on heavy ice, which prevented it and the boy going under the ice. The child would probably have been drowned, but for the timely assistance of Linton Martin, who was watching the coasters, and ran to the rescue of the little fellow. Others who witnessed the accident procured blankets, and wrapping the boy in blankets, them sent him to his home.

NEW RECTOR FOR ST. MARKS CHURCH

Father J. E. Murphy, of Phila., Will Succeed the Late Father Bradley in Bristol.

It was announced last Friday that Bishop Prendegast had appointed Rev. J. E. Murphy, assistant rector of the Church of Our Lady of Mercy, Broad and Susquehanna avenue, Philadelphia, to the rectorship of St. Marks church, Bristol, to succeed the late Father Bradley, who died in Philadelphia on Friday of last week. Father Murphy is one of the best known members of the clergy in the northern part of Philadelphia, and is regarded as one of the best theologians in the archdiocese. Father Murphy assumed his new duties last Sunday.

He is a native of Philadelphia, being born in St. Phillip's parish in 1870. He made his early studies in the parochial schools, later attending a private academy and taking up the study of theology in St. Charles' Seminary, Overbrook. After winning unusual honors in his class, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1895 by Archbishop Ryan and was at once sent to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Jenkintown, where he remained but a few months. His first permanent appointment was to St. Cecilia's church, Coatesville, from which he was transferred to the Church of the Holy Family as assistant rector to the late Father McEnroe.

For the past fifteen years Father Murphy has been stationed at the church of Our Lady of Mercy, where he has been a powerful auxiliary to Rev. Gerald Coghlan in the erection of the new church, regarded as one of the finest in the country. Father Murphy has had charge of many of the parish societies, among others the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, and is exceedingly popular throughout the parish, especially among the young men. Father Murphy's removal from the Church of Our Lady of Mercy is received with sincere regret by the priests and people of that parish.

IMPORTANT PARTS

In sanitary plumbing, as in life, are often played by the little things. The lack of a mite of a washer, a single broken or wornout thread on a screw or cap in an escape pipe, may bring you annoyance, possibly sickness. Put on Your Glasses
AND READ THIS:

I can stand for the chap with the monogramed shirt,
And the boy with his trouers upturned;
And the man with the hat made of plush I assert,
I can stand, though the fad I have spurned.
I can stand for the guy with the white in his vest,
And not even grin when he passes.
But I snicker and smile, when I gaze on, the while,
The guy with the tortoise shell glasses.

I don't mind the man with the rakish green hat
With the bow in the back, nor the fellow
Who trims off each shoe with an up-to-date spat,
Nor the brother whose gloves are bright yellow.
But I'm ready to flee, when that dandy I see,
The guy with the tortoise shell glasses.

I can put up with him who must trim off each sleeve
With a row of pearl buttons, and note
In silence the man (though I secretly grieve)
With the braid on the edge of his coat.
The man with the handkerchief worn to be seen
N... my feelings harasses.
But ... to smile, with my left and my right,
The guy with the tortoise shell glasses.

The Oldershaw Mystery

Clever Lawyer Checkmates A Well Laid Plot

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Harley & Rogers, Attorneys and Counselors at Law."

The gold lettered sign on the door gave no hint that the firm of young lawyers [illegible] the solving of mysteries [illegible] as the case. In the be[illegible] it had been a hobby to fill some of the [illegible] leisure of an un[illegible] law [illegible] now they had become well known as specialists in unraveling mysteries of a delicate nature.

The stenographer laid a card on Dick Harley's desk.

"Mr Samuel Oldershaw," read Dick wonderingly. "I will see him at once, Miss Brown," he said to the young woman.

Presently a stout man was ushered into the presence of the young lawyer and [illegible] sank breathlessly into a deep chair.

"I am in trouble, and I've come to you for assistance," he said bluntly. "I understand that you undertake cases of a mysterious character."

"Occasionally such cases come our way, and we do not decline them," smiled Harley.

"This is a very delicate matter and concerns a member of my household. I have an only daughter, Beryl," re[sumed Mr Oldershaw.]

"THIS IS THE PLACE WHERE THE GEMS WERE HIDDEN," SAID MR OLDERSHAW

sumed Mr Oldershaw. "My daughter is engaged to be married to a young man who is at present employed as my private secretary.

"Gray Denison is a fine chap and as nearly worthy of Beryl as any man that I know, and my daughter is my rarest possession." His pale gray eyes glowed with feeling as he spoke, and Harley nodded understandingly.

"Yet there disappeared from my private museum on the top floor of my house my entire collection of rare gems. This collection was priceless; there is no other like it in the world. Gray Denison had charge of it. No other person had access to the safe wherein it was secreted. No one else knew that the safe was there."

"When did you discover your loss?" asked Harley.

"This morning. I was entertaining an English friend, Sir Morgan Tilbury, himself an ardent collector of gems. I went to the safe—the cases containing the gems had disappeared. Denison expressed bewilderment at the discovery—declared that he had seen them the previous evening. That is all. Where are my gems?" asked Mr Oldershaw [illegible].

Harley pondered thoughtfully. "The servants?" he questioned.

Oldershaw shook his head impatiently.

"Above suspicion. All of them have served me for years."

"What did Sir Morgan Tilbury say regarding your loss?"

"Of course he sympathized with my disappointment, but his time was limited. I had sold him a mummy which he had long desired. I'm not especially keen on mummies, and I have a number, and he was more interested in closing the transaction and making arrangements to have the mummy removed from the museum. He sails day after tomorrow."

"You have known him for a long time?"

"Off and on for a dozen years. He also is above suspicion. Suppose you accompany me home and look over the ground."

A half hour's swift ride brought them to the residence of Samuel Oldershaw.

An old negro butler admitted them, and following Mr Oldershaw's lead, Harley went up two flights of stairs to the museum, which was situated on the top floor of the house.

Mr Oldershaw produced a key and unlocked a great steel plated door.

Dick Harley glanced around at the rich collection of pictures that graced the soft tinted walls, at the rare porcelains behind glass doors and the thousand and one objects d'art that Samuel Oldershaw had loved to gather about him.

"Where is your safe, Mr Oldershaw?" asked Harley.

The millionaire smiled and crossed over to [illegible] chest that stood [illegible] the south wall. He bent over it and [illegible] with the lock, and im[illegible] the [illegible] piece of furniture swung away from the wall and disclosed [illegible] in the wall. A key un[illegible] the inner door of the safe, and [illegible] twisted the combination [illegible] opened revealing shelves [illegible] drawers crowded with treasures.

One compartment the entire width of the [illegible].

[illegible] where the gems [illegible] Mr Oldershaw [illegible] lawyer. They [illegible] in the tray and the [illegible] was concealed under [illegible].

[illegible] Sir Morgan [illegible] museum?

[illegible] in the past week—the [illegible] acquaintance with [illegible] time to sound me [illegible] of the mummy and [illegible] the deal. [illegible] this evening.

—he is anxious to have it boxed and sent aboard the ship."

"Did you find Sir Morgan changed in any way?"

Samuel Oldershaw started and clapped a hand on his knee.

"That's odd, Harley," he exclaimed. "I did find him changed in an indefinable way that I can hardly explain. He seemed a bit older for one thing, but that was quite natural as I had not seen him for twelve years, but he appeared to be changed in other ways; his manners were coarsened, and he was decidedly off on many things relating to his especial hobby. I laid it to drink—he certainly gave evidences of it—as well as to some mental affection. Surely he was not the same courtly gentleman I had known in London."

"Is he a rich man?" asked Harley.

"Yes, beyond dispute."

"Please point out to me the mummy which Sir Morgan has purchased," requested Harley.

Mr Oldershaw led the way to the northwest corner of the room, where the largest mummy case stood, a gorgeous mass of color against the monotone of the wall.

Mr Oldershaw lifted a tiny hasp, and the door swung wide open on well oiled hinges. Inside was a smaller case, which opened at the millionaire's touch and revealed the shriveled form of a mummy.

Harley's keen eyes scanned the brown mummy with its stained wrappings. Then he scribbled something in his notebook. He tore out the leaf and inclosed it in an envelope.

"Please have this cablegram sent at once," he said. "I'll wait here until the reply comes back."

"But, my dear Harley, it may be hours—"

"Never mind, I will wait. Perhaps you will send me up a bite to eat," suggested Harley. "It is now 2 o'clock. I should have a reply before midnight."

"Very good, Mr Harley. Evidently you know your business," said Mr Oldershaw reluctantly. "If there is any thing else I can do—"

Harley whispered a few words in his ear, and the millionaire went out looking much dazed, but quite convinced that Harley was handling the case in a highly satisfactory manner.

Harley sat down and read page after page of dry scientific reviews. Apparently he read them, but never once did his gaze wander long from the mummy case in the corner.

At 6 o'clock the butler brought him a delicious dinner, which he ate under the white glare of the electric ceiling lights. Then more hours passed while he waited.

At 10 o'clock Mr Oldershaw panted upstairs again.

"Well, Harley," he said expectantly. "Sir Morgan's men have come to take away the mummy case."

"Where is Sir Morgan?"

"They say he will come in later."

"Is he in the habit of appearing suddenly before you—or is he announced in the usual way?" was Harley's startling question.

"That's odd," cried Oldershaw, rubbing his hands nervously. "He called upon me yesterday, and while Amos, my butler, remembers admitting him he has not the slightest recollection of letting him out, although Amos was in the entrance hall all afternoon. And furthermore he does not remember admitting him this morning, and even now protests that he hasn't seen him depart. I'm afraid Amos is getting old."

Harley smiled and asked another question, this time in a low tone.

"Have the special officers arrived?"

"Outside the door."

Mr Oldershaw pulled aside some tapestries, and at Harley's quiet signal six men glided like shadows into the room and concealed themselves behind the tapestries.

"Amos has orders to bring my cable when it comes," asked Harley.

"At once. Shall I let Sir Morgan's men up now? I have no excuse for detaining them."

"Yes—and Mr Oldershaw," Harley followed him to the steel door and whispered, "do not be surprised if you suddenly discover that Sir Morgan Tilbury is among us in the museum."

"What do you mean?"

"Only that he is concealed behind the mummy case and has been since his call yesterday afternoon. He will undoubtedly choose the proper moment and mingle with his men, trusting to the confusion to convince you that he has just arrived at the house."

"My God, Harley, what do you mean to insinuate?" asked Mr Oldershaw breathlessly.

"Nothing more than—ah, here are the men!" Harley stepped back into the museum as a slender, dark eyed young man came up the stairs, followed by several rough looking men in cloth caps and teamsters' clothing.

"I was just coming down, Denison," remarked Mr Oldershaw, introducing the dark eyed young man to the lawyer detective. "Well, men, I hope you understand the handling of this mummy case. It's a very valuable thing and must be handled with great care."

The four teamsters stared curiously around the museum until Mr Oldershaw led them to Sir Morgan's mummy.

"This is the case, Mr Oldershaw was saying, when suddenly the lights went out and there was a quick shuffling sound of feet. Denison leaped through the darkness and, placing his hand on a secret switch, lighted half a dozen emergency lights in the four corners of the room.

In the brief interval of darkness another person had been added to the seven men in the museum. A tall, middle aged man in immaculate evening clothes smiled at Samuel Oldershaw. His side whiskers were iron gray, and his abundant hair was of the same mixture. His nose was prominent and his eyes small and close together. Sir Morgan Tilbury was not a handsome man nor an altogether prepossessing individual.

"Ah, my dear Oldershaw," he said heartily, "such a joke, don't you know! Just as I stepped in the door your lights went out! How are you—eh?" He put out a white hand, which Mr Oldershaw grasped while bewilderment overspread his mild countenance. He looked from the Englishman to the mummy case, which was undoubtedly moved from its position directly across the corner.

"Ha! Get to work there, men!" ordered the baronet sharply. "You're late enough as it is—sorry to trouble you at this hour, Mr Oldershaw."

As the four workmen took hold of the mummy case Harley lifted his hand, and at the signal the six plain clothes men glided across the floor. Two of them grasped the unsuspecting baronet and slipped handcuffs on his white wrists while the other four as speedily overcame the four workmen.

In the meantime Mr Oldershaw protested vigorously against this ill treatment of his old friend, Sir Morgan Tilbury, while that exasperated individual hurled oaths at Harley and his assistants. Gray Denison stood apart, white and uncomprehending.

"What does this mean, Mr Harley?" demanded Mr Oldershaw.

"This cable message may explain," said Harley as Amos entered the museum and tendered an envelope on a salver.

Mr Oldershaw stared at the words over Harley's shoulder. The message was from Scotland Yard and was sent in reply to Harley's urgent inquiry. "Sir Morgan Tilbury confined to his home with gout. Your man must be impostor."

In a few words Harley informed Mr Oldershaw [illegible] the English representative [illegible] baronet [illegible] sion and [illegible] ing his [illegible] the museum [illegible] In the [illegible] removed [illegible] In the [illegible] chase of the [illegible] blind to [illegible] afford [illegible] from the [illegible] not be suspected.

Harley did [illegible] deduction which [illegible]

TWO OF THEM [illegible] THE UNSUSPECTING [illegible]

his solution of the puzzle, but he opened the outer and the inner mummy case, and from the [illegible] mummy rags at the feet of the mummy he brought out a [illegible] bag containing the stolen gems.

While the police [illegible] the bogus baronet away [illegible] with the workmen who were under suspicion of complicity in the crime, Mr Oldershaw laid his hand on Harley's shoulder.

"Well done, Harley," he said warmly. "If you will [illegible] to the library now, Gray and I will give you a check."

The three went downstairs, Samuel Oldershaw's hand on the shoulder of Gray Denison, and Harley knew that the old man was trying to make for his unjust suspicion of his future son in law.

And the check that Harley displayed to his partner the next day caused John Rogers' eyes to open wide.

CRANKS AT SEA.

Some of the Things With Which Captains Have to Contend

Paul [illegible] suppressed [illegible] ocean liner [illegible] the ordinary [illegible] the ship's officer. Often [illegible] who seem to [illegible] belief that their [illegible] the ship, and who pursue the engineer or the captain with incessant advice.

On our last trip, which was very rough, one old gentleman tried to reach the bridge, where the captain was, and had to be halted by force.

"But I want to ask the captain about the crew," he fumed. "Is the crew trustworthy? What shall we do if we sink? What shall I tell my wife?"

Two sailors were detailed to take him below with instructions to remain and answer his questions.

When we reached port his first act was to call on the president of the steamship company for the purpose of giving notice that he would never travel on another ship of their line. Said he:

"It was only by a miracle that any of your passengers reached port at all. In the midst of all that storm with the sea threatening to swallow us all your captain slunk away where not a soul could reach him.

"I call that negligence!"—New York Times.

LOST HIS OWN CASE.

An Unfortunate Contradiction That Queered Him In Court

A Cleveland lawyer tells a story about a woman from the country who wanted a divorce. When the case got into court the judge, disregarding for the moment the technical grounds, tried to find out the real reason for the lady's desire to be separated from the man she had lived with for so many years. The man himself was in court with a lawyer, and it looked as if he was going to fight the case.

"Mrs Dash," said the judge, "tell me what fault you have to find with your husband."

"He is a liar, a brute, a thief and a brainless fool!" answered the lady promptly.

"Tut, tut!" exclaimed his honor. "You could hardly prove all that."

"Prove it? Why, everybody knows it!"

"If you knew it, why did you marry him?"

"I didn't know it before I married him."

Then the husband spoke for the first time.

"She did too!" he shouted.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Answered the Call

Floors castle, home of the Duke of Roxburghe, was the scene of a curious psychical mystery over a century ago. Sir Walter Scott relates the incident. John, third Duke of Roxburghe, who died in 1804, the celebrated book collector, when arranging his library employed neither a secretary nor a librarian, but a footman called Archie, who knew every book as a shepherd does each sheep of his flock. There was a bell hung in the duke's room at Floors which was used on no occasion except to call Archie to his study. The duke died in St. James' square at a time when Archie was himself sinking under a mortal complaint. On the day of the funeral the library bell suddenly rang violently. The dying Archie sat up in bed and faltered, "Yes, my lord duke, yes; I will wait on your grace instantly." And with these words on his lips he fell back in bed and died.—St. James' Gazette.

No Joke at All

Reginald came into the club in a highly excited state one afternoon and drew an acquaintance aside into a corner of the lounge.

"What do you think?" said he. "I went to see that broker fellow Rosenwasser and asked for a loan of $1,000 to tide me over. If you'll believe me, the bounder said all he could spare was 50 cents."

"Never mind, Reggie," replied the acquaintance soothingly, "that was just Rosenwasser's little joke."

"Joke! You call it a joke, do you? Look here! Here's the 50 cents."—New York Post.

Rough on Ellen

Among the quaint scrapbooks of the late Clyde Fitch there was one devoted entirely to typographical errors.

One of these errors appeared in a criticism of Ellen Terry. The reviewer wrote: "Her love of Portia made acting easy." The sentence appeared in the paper as "Her love of port made acting easy."—Florida Times-Union.

Satire.

Satire is a sort of glass wherein beholders do generally discover every body's face but their own, which is the chief reason for that kind reception it meets with in the world.—Swift.

The world would be both better and brighter if we would dwell on the duty of happiness as well as on the happiness of duty.—Sir John Lubbock.

Why the Wise Are Early Risers

It is a curious fact in psychology that nobody can stay at the same mental and physical level for twenty-four hours together. In the morning you are more matter of fact, for instance, than later in the day. It is in the morning that the best brainwork is done too—brainwork of the sort that requires industry and clear thinking. And it is about 11 in the morning that your body reaches its highest point of energy. In other words, you are stronger, though almost imperceptibly, at 11 in the morning than at 3 in the afternoon. You reach that highest point twice in the day, for about 5 in the afternoon the muscular energy has risen again. But from 5 onward it declines steadily all through the evening and on till between 2 and 3 a. m.—New York Press.

Records That Should Be Preserved.

In many private homes and in thousands of offices are to be found public records of inestimable value that daily run the risk of destruction. These should be preserved to posterity. Loss would mean annihilation. It is therefore the duty of all discerning ones throughout this broad land to take a personal interest in their preservation. They should no longer be left to the care of officers and indifferent citizens who are in too many instances ignorant of their value and reckless as to their preservation.—Magazine of American History.

KEPT HIS SECRET WELL.

Even Scott's Son Didn't Know Who Wrote the Waverley Novels

A Scotch newspaper having referred to the old story that Walter Scott's son of the great novelist had never read his father's novels, the Dunfermline Court Journal reprints a letter that first appeared in its columns on Sept. 17, 1859. It was signed "Veritas," and the writer says: "From 1810 to 1833 I resided in Edinburgh and was on intimate terms with Walter Scott. Sitting together one winter evening several years before his father made the famous declaration at the theatrical fund dinner held in the assembly rooms of Edinburgh that he was the author of the Waverley novels, I put the following questions to my friend: 'Do you not really and truly believe your father to be the author of the Waverley novels, or who do you suppose the author to be?'

"His answer was 'I have really no idea who the author is. If my father is the author he keeps the secret to himself, for none of the family knows.' And then he added: 'The moment a new novel (by the author of "Waverley") is announced my father orders a copy from his bookseller, and the whole family assembles in the parlor in the evening to hear the novel read by myself and my sisters, each taking a turn.'

"He further added: 'When anything very droll or funny occurs in the reading of the novel my father joins most heartily in the laugh, perhaps more so than any of the family.'"

Got the Best of Carlyle.

The Rev. Thomas Alexander, a Presbyterian minister long resident in Chelsea and well known as a brother Scot, was most anxious to know Carlyle, but had no opportunity of getting an introduction to him. One day in the King's road he saw Carlyle coming in his direction and took advantage of the opportunity by going up to the sage and saying, "Thomas Carlyle, I believe." Carlyle's reply was, "Tom Alexander, I know!" They became good friends, and later Mr. Alexander wrote to Carlyle for a subscription toward a school building, but Carlyle wrote back a refusal in doggerel, whereupon Mr. Alexander replied that if he did not send him £5 he would sell his poetry to a collector or publish it. The £5 was at once forthcoming.

Naming the Picture

The artist was of the impressionist school. He had just given the last touches to a purple and blue canvas when his wife came into the studio.

"My dear," said he, "this is the landscape I wanted you to suggest a title for."

"Why not call it 'Home'?" she said after a long look.

"'Home'? Why?"

"Because there's no place like it," she replied meekly.—Glasgow Times.

Pleasures

The objects of pleasure are two in number. First to kill time and second to keep us from doing something else which would make us more miserable. The pleasures of the American people, roughly speaking, are likewise twofold—namely, making money and spending it. Some people derive all their pleasure from making money and others all their pleasure from spending it. Others combine the two.

Being an inventive people the Americans have created many ways of spending money. Being too busy making it to spend any time on the drudgery of running their country, they spend a large portion of it in supporting the politicians. This indeed is one of their chief pleasures. And their superb sense of humor enables them to enjoy intensely the accounts of what all the politicians are doing which enterprising papers publish from day to day.

The Americans have other pleasures but compared with this one they are mostly trivial.—Life.

Riches

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou mayest get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully and leave contentedly, yet have no abstract contempt of them.—Bacon.

How an Out-of-town Telephone Connection Is Made

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. LOCAL LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE BELL SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

To make an out-of-town telephone call, tell the operator the name of the Exchange and the number you wish to speak to. She will immediately record this on a special ticket.

The operator using this ticket calls the distant point and secures the number you desire.

Thus a vibrant wireway has been built up for your voice—two lines of copper wire constitute the circuit; for example, from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, 750 miles of wire are placed at your exclusive service.

This simplified explanation gives an idea of the "there-and-back" quality which enters into every out-of-town telephone message.

Next time you want to go out of town ask the operator for the rates and take a telephone trip.

A PERILOUS CROSSING.

They Got Safely Over and Then Came a Curious Climax

Mrs. Exe stood on a crowded corner when the traffic was at its height, staring at the thick tangled come and go of motorcars and drays and cabs and not daring to venture in among the dangers of that moving mass.

"May I cross the street with you, madam?"

She turned and saw an elderly stranger with lifted hat and gallant smile.

"Oh, thank you!" said Mrs. Exe. And the stranger grasped her arm with a firm grip and together they plunged boldly into the wild crush of vehicles.

In and out, right and left, up and down, they zigzagged at imminent peril of life and limb. Pedestrians on the sidewalk stopped and looked at them. Drivers and chauffeurs shouted and swore at them. It was plain to all that they were in unusual danger.

The escort of Mrs. Exe still wearing his gallant smile, still grasping her arm firmly, seemed to make no effort to avoid the oncoming vehicles. He darted erratically and yet calmly this way and that.

At last by a miracle the other side was reached. Mrs. Exe then jerked her arm away from her escort's grasp and, with a look of scorn, she said:

"It's no thanks to you that we were not both killed. Why the way you positively courted danger one would think you were blind!"

"Madam, I am blind," he replied. "That's why I asked if I could cross with you."—New York Tribune.

Fatalities Among Alpinists.

In view of the fact that every man or woman who walks up a mountain with alpenstock in hand is a climber in the eyes of the public it is not at all strange that the appalling annual fatalities in the Swiss Alps are laid at the door of one of the noblest of sports. The truth is that these fatalities—there were 105 last year—are relatively few and far between in the ranks of genuine alpinists, the amateur and professional mountaineers. They who climb with ice ax instead of alpenstock are cautious—first, last and always. Considering the risk taken few of them lose their lives. Most who meet this frightful death in the Swiss mountains have always been either unthinking or downright reckless tempters of fate. With a complete disregard of common sense, these unfortunates go where they have no business to go save in charge of an experienced guide, and sometimes the mere reaching out for a coveted wild flower sends them to their doom.—Spur.

Not So Dutiful.

"Where will Mrs. Dobs go now that both her daughters are married—to her son-in-law's house in Birmingham or to that of her son-in-law in Leeds?"

"One wants her in Birmingham, and the other wishes she would go to Leeds."

"What dutiful sons in law!"

"I beg your pardon. The one in Birmingham wants her in Leeds, the one in Leeds wants her in Birmingham."—London Tit-Bits.

WHERE HISTORY IS LAME.

Benefactors of the Human Race Who Get Too Little Credit

History as it is written and as it is taught is one great panorama of wars and dynasties. It bristles with the names of doughty warriors and rulers, describes at length their struggles and achievements and dismisses the inventors and promoters of the great agencies which have made modern civilization possible with scanty, if any, mention.

The invention of printing has had more influence upon the development of the race than any act of any ruler that the world has ever known, and more than half of those who read this will not know the inventor's name.

The men who invented and developed the steam engine did more to lighten human toil and to make possible to each of the dwellers upon earth a larger meed of comfort and enjoyment than all the generals who ever pitted men against their fellows. Hunt for their names in the indexes of your histories.

Art and literature have been broad highways to fame. The high school scholar can tell you who wrote what and when he wrote it, but ask him who built the first railroad in America and when and where it was. The magnificent Albert memorial is covered with the names of authors and painters and sculptors, but Michelangelo is there because he was an artist, not because he was an architect, and Leonardo Da Vinci because he was a painter and not because he was an engineer.—Power.

Another Pull

The kaiser has a habit of gently tugging at his left ear when anything bothers him.

One day some years ago when he was on a visit to England he was handed a telegram. The contents of the message apparently displeased him, for he immediately began tugging at his ear.

The Prince of Wales, then a boy, watched the performance with considerable interest.

"Uncle," he said at length, "why are you pulling your ear?"

"Because I'm annoyed, I suppose," replied the kaiser.

"And when you're very annoyed," persisted the young prince, "what do you do then?"

"Then I pull somebody else's," announced his majesty viciously.—London Tatler.

They Kicked on the Speed and Baggage Smashing In 1846

A correspondent, Professor [illegible] Morse of Salem, sends [illegible] extract from a letter written [illegible] Agassiz to his mother [illegible] dated Boston [illegible] 1846.

Leaving Boston the 16th [illegible] I went by railroad to New [illegible] passing through Springfield [illegible] ity of the locomotion is frightful [illegible] those who are unused to it [illegible] adapt yourself to the speed and become like all the rest of the world impatient of the slightest delay. I understand that an antipathy for this mode of travel is possible. There is something infernal in the [illegible] power of steam carrying such enormous masses along with the swiftness of lightning.

The habits growing out of continued contact with railroads and the influence they exert on a portion of the community are far from agreeable until one is familiar with them. You would cry out in dismay did you see your baggage flung pell mell like logs of wood—trunks, chests, traveling bags, hat boxes—all in the same mill, and if here and there something goes to pieces no one is astonished. Never mind! We go fast—we gain time. That is the essential thing."

And this was on the Boston and Albany! And there was baggage smashing in 1846.—Boston Herald.

TIME TO CURTAIL STUDY.

Check Brain Work When the Child Is Growing Rapidly

As soon as a child begins to grow rapidly all intellectual exertion should be checked. Such is the theory which Dr. C. Mercier, the famous English authority on children, expresses in an article in the London Lancet. Especially when there is any family tendency to nervous or mental disorder rapidly growing children should be withdrawn from school altogether until the period of rapid growth is over.

Mercier does not think that intellectual work at high pressure is harmful to either boys or girls as long as food, sleep and bodily exercise are sufficient, but he is sure that pressure of intellectual work in those who are growing rapidly should never be permitted and if growth be proceeding very rapidly all intellectual work should be put aside.

Dr. Mercier insists that it is scarcely possible to give growing children too much to eat, and it should always be borne in mind that the carbohydrates—starch, sugar and fat—are mainly fuel that is burned up in producing muscular movement and that the proteins are the main elements in the formation of tissue. Consequently it is a mistake to restrict the meat ration of children.

Nietzsche Hated the Germans

"Nietzsche's personal charm of manner," said Dr. Brandes, the Danish critic, in a recent lecture, "was in strong contrast to the violence with which he attacked established institutions in his writings. His pet aversion was the Germans, and in his late books the word Teutonic stood for him for all that was evil. To dine with Germans, he said, gave him indigestion!

"This antipathy to his countrymen is closely paralleled in Byron's antipathy to Englishmen, Stendahl's to the French and Heine's to the Germans. It arose in Nietzsche's case from a disgust of humanity—a disgust which was best expressed by what the Greeks called misanthropy."—London Globe.

She Makes Violins.

Working quietly in a sunny apartment in Brooklyn the only woman maker of violins in this country, if not in the world, plies her trade. She came by her talent naturally, for her father was a famous maker of violins in Austria in his day, and he imparted the secret of his art to his daughter. The young woman fashions the delicate instruments with the master's touch and then, when all is completed, applies the coat of varnish, that process which makes or mars the finest instruments. The formula of the varnish is a secret given to her by her father.—New York Tribune.

French Kongo

The territory formerly known as the French Kongo and now designated as French Equatorial Africa comprises more than 600,000 square miles and contains approximately 7,000,000 inhabitants. The country is divided into three colonies: Gabon, capital at Libreville; Moyen (or middle) Kongo, capital at Brazzaville; Ubangi-Chari, capital at Fort de Possel, and the territory of Tchad.

Togoland.

Togoland, a German West African colony, lies between Dahomey on the east and the Gold Coast colony on the west, the Atlantic ocean being the southern boundary. It has an area of 33,659 square miles and a population of more than 1,000,000.

Holding Thumbs For Nilsson

My professional vocation has brought me up against almost every conceivable superstition, from Brignoli's stuffed deer's head to the more common place fetish against thirteen as a number. But I never saw any one more obsessed by an idea of this sort than Christine Nilsson. She actually would not sing unless some one "held her thumbs" first. "Holding thumbs" is quite an ancient way of inciting good luck. One promises to "hold one's thumbs" for a friend who is going through some ordeal, like a first night or an operation for appendicitis or a wedding or anything else desperate. Nilsson was the first person I ever knew who practiced the charm the other way about. Before she would even go on the stage somebody, if only the stage carpenter, had to take hold of her two thumbs and press them. She was convinced that the mystic rite brought her good fortune.—"Memoirs of an American Prima Donna," by Clara Louise Kellogg.
